A SERMON FOR THE MILLION.

From the Macon Telegraph.]

Iniquity stalks abroad in open day. With brauen front she clamors at our street corners, she sets her nets by the wayaide—she enters our houses—she corrupts our young men—she rains our young women—she controls our populace—she paralyzes the church—she is leading usto destruction. The heavens are black with threatnings—all earth is vocal with warning—all providence is a protest against our sins. God wooed us in our prosperity and we waxed fat and kicked against Him. He has sent adversity and we robel yet more. Our land ravaged by war, our dwellings burned, our towns and cities destroyed, our wealth wested from us; many of our best and bravet slaim—mourning in almost every home, sorrow and gloom in every heart—the past lost, the future having no promise—all this is the terrible voice of God calling us to repentance, lest worse befall; and iniquity is allowed still to stalk abroad, gathering her forces against Jehovah, growing bolder day by day, and sweeping the land with a wider ruin. More and more we pursue evil, break down every barrier an Almighty hand has built across our path, overleap all obstructions, dely argument, scoff at entresty, repel all calls to repent.

ence that can be brought to bear, and even over the teachings of God's word?

we still continue to repose together in her the track, they lost the road, bearing to the south, on the uninhabited prairie. In the first place, we may say that public opinion is deprayed. Its standard of right is low and lowering. It has no rebuke for many vices—nay, for many crimes. Some our unhappy divisions, and knit us together vices it encourages, because they are fascinating; others, again, are popular because there is money in them. Should an honest legisator seek to arm the law with authority to uppress the schools of vice and to close the eatres of temptation, that dot our thoroughares, stand masked at our street corners, or now affixed to crime, the wicked combine against him and defeat his efforts to maintain good order. Public opinion is not arrayed on the side of right.

Secondly—there is a school in society itself which prepares its constituent members only for the pursuit of sin, and for the death which follows. It is that of the gay and godless world of pleasure-hunters, against which the pulpit warns in vain. The wise man says, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The way of the giddy throng whose highest idea of happiness is, that it is social pleasure, seems right to these deluded phantom-worshippers; but the sad truth is, that they are crowding the way to death, and yet they will not be warred.

But behind society we find the family and the individul sinner, and with theas the corruption begins. They make societ, and it is only justice to say, that the respective property is generally and the individul sinner, and with these the corruption begins. They make societ, and it is only justice to say, that the respective property is a subjustice to say, that the respective property is directly chargeable to the neglect of home circle, a judicious system of all that is said upon it, appreciate the influence for time and for eternity of a well-ordered home-circle, a judicious system of all that is said upon it, appreciate the influence for time and for eternity of a well-ordered home-circle, a judicious system of domestic instruction. It is a school always open, teaching as well by example as school in society itself which for load away and godless world of pleasure-hunters, against which follows. It is not of the society will not a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The way of the giddy throng whose highest idea of happiness is, that it is social pleasure, seems right to these deluded phantom-worshippers; but the sad truth is, that they are crowding the way to death, and yet they will not be warred.

But behind society we find the family and the individual sinn ruption begins. They make society, and it s made in their own likeness. In the head of the family you shall find a an of whom all men speak well. He lends dignity to his calling, however humble in itself, by his industry and integrity. He is bonorable, enterprising, energetic, and, what the world prizes most, successful. Absorbed in his pursuits, one triumph achieved only paves the way to another, and stimulates to the wide departure in this regard from the habits of our fathers are numerous. The great one, no doubt, is the intense carnestness which his way down the creek to the New Hampton bonorable, enterprising, energetic, and, what the world prizes most, successful. Absorbed gher effort. He prospers. Wealth and onor, with all their fruits, accumulate about him. Thus, years pass away, and his children grow up, basking in the sunshine of his prosperity—and old age finds him, must we say it?) only a sinner, having pursued evil all his days, A professed believer in the Christian region—an attendant upon its services—a beral supporter of its institutions—with all his his life gives no answer to the high claims it makes upon him. His influence is not given to the Church; its sacraments have no significancy in his life of unbelief; and in his household God's word does not assert dominion. No family altar is there -prayer is unknown-and all the precepts of life taught there are taught from the code of honor, or of worldly prudence, not ounded on the highest and most imperative of all the grounds of obedience-duty to prices that prevailed for five years, stimula-God. Under such a tutilage what are we to expect, but that the sons will grow up idle look to the results for evidence of the ability and dissipated, and the daughters irreligious, of foreign countries to compete with our proextravagant and worldly-minded?

Finally, a cause for the prevalence of sin may be found in the delinquencies of professing Christians—in their neglect of personal duty and of family religion—in their likeness to the world in character and principle and conduct.

The father has but little intercourse with his children, for his business will not permit it. The mother finds the care of the family and the demands of society too urgent for the proper discharge of her religious duty to them. And so they are both likely to resort to the compromises and substitutes which have been provided, and to be care-less about the influences which will do as much for their children's education as any FOREIGN PRODUCTION OF COTTONsupplied 3,400,000 bales out of the 4,225,000 delivered for consumption in all Europe, or more than three-quarters. To this new commission, in the opinion of the memorialists, should be referred not only to the rubrics, but also the canons and constitutions and occasional services; for holding that action being now clearly inevitable, they think it would be a cause of regret should the force of it become expended upon minor subjects, such as vestments or candlesticks, or some peculiar systems of ritual and ministration, while passing by matters more essential to the peace and stability of the Church.
